Fans in Philly go insane with World Cup fever

Fair-weather fans? People who hadn't played soccer since fifth grade were decked out in Team USA colors Sunday.

For a complete TV schedule, visit Metro.us/world-cup.

Hundreds of newly minted soccer fans were swarming sports stores, inspired by the USA World Cup team's first-round victory and hoping for a repeat Sunday.

"Interest has really been high since they kicked off for the first game," said Gus Collazo, assistant manager at Modell's Sporting Goods at Rittenhouse, where World Cup gear was selling like hotcakes Sunday to fans traveling to nearby bars to cheer for USA against Portugal.

It looked like victory for the USA but Portugal scored a goal in extra time. The final was a 2-2 tie.

Quoted

"We're underdogs! The whole world never believes in the U.S. But even if we lose, whenever we get a goal, it's the best feeling in the world."

Cely Cardone, soccer fan

"Of course you're gonna have the fair-weather fans. But everyone's in it for the U.S.," Collazo said.

Orders for Team USA jerseys and T-shirts came in so fast that some Modell's stores around Philly were running out of stock.

"Today probably 90 percent of the phone calls have been all like 'Do you guys have the jersey?'" said Kyle Morris, head cashier at the Rittenhouse Modell's.

Fans of Colombia, Brazil and Mexico have also been buying up their countries' team jerseys from Modell's — in fact, only one Mexico jersey was left in the store by Sunday evening.

For fans watching the game Sunday night, wrapping themselves in the flag was part of the fun.

Soccer merch

Since the U.S. team's first-round victory over Ghana, fans were taking home the following items from Modell's by the dozen:

- Various countries' jerseys and T-shirts
- Sticker books, pennants, decals
- The official World Cup Brazuca balls
- Official Mexican Capitano balls

"It means a lot," said Luky Morales, 26, of her USA getup, while watching Fado Irish Pub's broadcast of the game from the second floor of the parking garage on Locust Street. "We have differences between us in this country, but this brings us all together."

The Fado World Cup block party was chock-a-block with hundreds of fans in patriotic gear by 4 p.m., two hours before game time. "It reminds us why we love this," said Fado manager Casey Neff. "Just listen to that crowd, the passion, the energy, the cheers — it gives me goosebumps."

Wanted. Police searching for Rittenhouse Square rapist

Police released surveillance video Sunday that shows a suspect as he forced a woman, 26, into her home early Sunday and sexually assaulted her.

Police said the woman was walking to her apartment on the 1900 block of Spruce Street around 1 a.m. when she was approached by a Hispanic man between the ages of 25 and 30.

Description of suspect

The attacker is further described as being about 5-foot-7, 160 pounds with black hair, wearing a black shirt, jeans, dark baseball hat and black messenger bag.

- Visit Metro.us to view the surveillance video.

The man allegedly pushed her toward her building's entrance, and while holding her by the neck, forced her to open her front door.

Once inside, he forced her upstairs and into her apartment where he sexually assaulted her, police said. The suspect also stole her iPhone and keys before leaving the house. METRO

World travelers

Philly is the 13th most visited U.S. city

Philadelphia moved up a spot over 2012 to become the 13th most visited city in the United States by overseas travelers in 2013, according to the U.S. Department of Commerce's Office of Travel and Tourism Industries.

The city saw 673,000 overseas visitors — a 13 percent increase. In 2002, Philadelphia was 21st on that list. METRO

BEEN INJURED?

AUTO ACCIDENTS • SEPTA ACCIDENTS • MEDICAL MALPRACTICE

Did You Know?

BIG BROTHER IS WATCHING.

Traffic and security/surveillance cameras are almost everywhere. If you are riding on SEPTA, there is a video of you reading this advertisement. If you are in a car accident or you fall, it is probable that it was captured on video.

Yes… there are videos at traffic lights. Yes… there are videos in stores. Many stores also capture video of nearby streets and sidewalks.

However, most cameras recycle video. Within a few days or weeks, video can be recorded-over.

If you're in an accident, take notice of any cameras nearby. Then, call us so we can secure the footage that may be evidence.

It could make all the difference in proving your case.

End of school doesn't mean end of meals

Eat up. Low-income students who stop getting school lunches can still get fed this summer.

While many public school students welcome summer dismissal, thousands of children and teens in Philadelphia who rely on subsidized school lunches and snacks lament losing a consistent meal.

But many aren't aware that meals are available.

Starting this month, any Philadelphian aged 18 and under can get free summer meals at more than 1,000 locations across the city without registration or identification.

Don't go hungry

To find your nearest summer meals site:

- Call the Philly Summer Meals Hotline: 1-855-252-MEAL
- Text "MealPA" to 877877

Meals in the program, which is sponsored by the United States Department of Agriculture, are distributed locally in the city at recreation centers, schools, religious centers, community organizations and public housing complexes, among other places.

"It's administered in the same way that school meals are distributed," said Ronna Bolante, spokeswoman with the Greater Philadelphia Coalition Against Hunger. "We distribute in most areas in Philadelphia because we have such a high poverty rate, so a child can go to any of these sites and have a free, unique meal."

In Pennsylvania, Bolante said, four out of five of those low-income students are not aware of this program, and thousands are falling into malnutrition without the regular school lunch.

"When school is out," she said, "these meals help fill the gap."

Fatal shootings

Three dead in weekend shootings

A violent weekend in Philadelphia left at least three dead in shootings around the city.

First, a 16-year-old male died in a hail of gunfire shortly after 11 p.m. Saturday in Kensington, police said. The shooting occurred at a barbecue attended by more than 300 people on the 700 block of Montgomery Avenue, and a police SUV pulling up to the scene was hit by one of the bullets, shattering a front window but not injuring any officers, reports say.

Then, around 1:30 a.m. Sunday, a 24-year-old man reportedly died after being shot at Galaxy Lounge at 3348 Germantown Avenue in North Philadelphia.

A third fatal shooting occurred in West Oak Lane around 4:45 p.m. Sunday on the 1900 block of 69th Avenue, reports say. The victim, in his 20s, was shot multiple times and was pronounced dead around 5 p.m.

No arrests were reported or victims identified as of press time.

TAWK LIKE A FLUFFYAN

When newborn Sean Monahan came home from the hospital 27 years ago, he settled into a snug abode on South Street. There, he grew as a true-blooded Philadelphian, until his parents decided that bringing up a baby on South Street in the late 1980s was probably not the best idea.

The Monahans soon moved to Bensalem and then Langhorne where he developed a true Philadelphian accent. He ate "hooooeegies" and drank "wudder" from the "spicket."

In 2005, Monahan left for Wooster College in Ohio. But none of his classmates understood what in the heck he was saying. "People thought I had a speech impediment."

So he flattened his "o" sounds and started asking for "wah-ter" to drink. Slowly, his "Fluffyan" accent disappeared. But who was he, Monhanan thought, if he wasn't rooting for "dem Phils" and going "danashor"?

He moved back to Philadelphia in 2009 to work for AmeriCorps and attend grad school at Temple. He proudly reclaimed his Philly accent and began uploading a series of "PhillyTawk" videos on YouTube. He explained and defined such words as "cawfly" — otherwise known as the beverage coffee — and "halss," which is where people live.

But the video that spread the fastest and got the most views was "Sh Philadelphians Say." He paired up with his childhood friend Harry Lichtner and Lichtner's comedy improv group.

They shot the video at locations all over the city, expounding in rapid-fire segments about annoying tourists, wiz wit and jawns.

Watch the video at Metro.us.
YOUTUBE

Quoted

"'Absolutely anything can be a jawn,' said Monahan. 'It's even more flexible than the word 'thing.'"

In fact, "jawn" is one of Monahan's favorite regional words, which he describes it as an all-purpose noun. "Absolutely anything can be a jawn. It's even more flexible than the word 'thing.'"

His "Sh Philadelphians Say" video and the extended cut version have been viewed more than 80,000 times on YouTube. Not everyone is a fan, however. At least 30 percent of the comments from viewers are some version of "There's no way these people are from Philly." Monahan said he doesn't mind, even when the comments get nasty. "I think people get super defensive about how they talk. And it's not in the Philadelphian style to let things go."

In September, Monahan again left Philly. He now lives in Rhode Island where he is earning his Ph.D. in poli-sci. But this time, he is proudly elongating his "o" sounds and "tawking" like a proud Philadelphian.

Kerry. US wants inclusive Iraq but won't choose its rulers

Militants push east

Iran rejects US action

Iran's supreme leader accused the United States on Sunday of trying to retake control of Iraq by exploiting sectarian rivalries, as Sunni insurgents drove toward Baghdad from new strongholds along the Syrian border.

Ayatollah Ali Khamenei's condemnation of U.S. action in Iraq came three days after President Barack Obama offered to send 300 military advisers in response to pleas from Iraq's government. It ran counter to speculation that old enemies Washington and Tehran might cooperate to defend their mutual ally in Baghdad after two weeks of swift territorial gains by Sunni Islamists. REUTERS

Secretary of State John Kerry and Egypt's Foreign Minister Sameh Hassan Shoukry held a joint press conference in Cairo. / GETTY IMAGES

Secretary of State John Kerry said on Sunday the United States wanted Iraqis to find an inclusive leadership to contain a sweeping Islamist insurgency but Washington would not pick or choose who rules in Baghdad.

Kerry was speaking at the start of a Middle East tour after talks in Cairo with Egypt's President Abdel Fattah al-Sisi that covered Western concerns over Egypt's crackdown on the Muslim Brotherhood and the fallout in Iraq.

Governments across the Middle East and beyond have been alarmed at the speed with which Sunni militants drove Shi'ite Prime Minister Nuri al-Maliki's troops out of large parts of north and west Iraq and pushed toward the capital.

The U.S. is sending 300 military advisers to Iraq, prompting Iran's Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei to accuse Washington of trying to regain control of the country it once occupied and rule "by its stooges" — a charge Kerry denied. REUTERS

Transgender priest speaks at National Cathedral

An Episcopal chaplain on Sunday became the first openly transgender priest to preach at the historic National Cathedral in Washington, D.C.

The Reverend Dr. Cameron Partridge spoke from the Canterbury Pulpit in honor of the lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender community's Pride Month, the Cathedral said.

"As we behold one another in these days of celebration may we honor the way we sustain each other," said Partridge, who is the Episcopal chaplain at Boston University. REUTERS

Get on up. Standing up during meetings good for productivity

Walking while working, usually on a treadmill, has been gaining popularity in recent years, but the next office innovation should be standing while meeting, according to a new study.

Researchers at Washington University in St. Louis, Missouri, report that groups working together on a project while standing are measurably more engaged and less territorial than while seated.

"A workspace that encourages people to stand up is going to lead to more collaborative and more creative outputs," Andrew Knight told Reuters Health in an email.

Knight's advice for setting up workspaces: "The first and foremost is to get up and get out of their chairs." REUTERS

Polish foreign minister called ties to US 'worthless'

A Polish news magazine said on Sunday it had obtained a secret recording of Foreign Minister Radoslaw Sikorski, saying that Poland's relationship with the United States was worthless.

The Wprost news magazine said the recording was of a private conversation earlier this year between Sikorski and Jacek Rostowski, a member of parliament "You know that the Polish-U.S. alliance isn't worth anything," Sikorski is heard saying. He also called Americans losers.

Body found in search for missing Seattle hiker near Mt. Rainier

Mounting concern. Missing outdoor recreation author Karen Sykes, 70, has been missing since Wednesday.

Mt. Rainier/ GETTY IMAGES

National Park Service rangers have suspended the search for a missing Seattle hiking enthusiast and author after finding the body of a woman in the search area around Mount Rainier, park officials told Reuters.

The body had not been identified, pending an investigation by the local medical examiner's office, said Mount Rainier National Park spokeswoman Patti Wold. There were no missing person reports aside from that of 70-year-old Karen Sykes in the park at the time, Wold said.

Quoted

"If you're walking along that trail, you won't necessarily see the trail because of the snow."

Mimi Gorman park spokeswoman

Sykes, who is considered an authority on outdoor recreation in the Pacific Northwest for her newspaper articles and books on hiking in and around the park, has been missing since she disappeared on a trail near Mount Rainier late Wednesday night, park officials said.

She and a companion had set out together on the 8-mile Owyhigh Lakes Trail on Wednesday, but split up when they reached a portion of that was covered in snow.

Sykes continued on by herself and her companion turned back, the Park Service said. When she did not return to the specified meeting point, the companion called authorities.

Ground teams had been scouring the trail prior to the suspension of the search on Saturday afternoon. Roughly 60 people took part over the three-day search, including a dog unit and helicopter crew, officials said.

This piece of jewelry is the first fashion accessory that is truly one of a kind: DNAME's bracelet is inscribed with your unique genetic code. But just how your sequence is woven into the wristband is where things get very "CSI." The creators behind the brand send you a DNA home testing kit that includes a cotton-tipped swab to rub around the inside of your mouth, just like the crime thrillers. The swab is then returned to a laboratory where the building blocks of your DNA code — guanine (G), adenine (A), thymine (T) and cytosine (C) — are lasered onto a 20-by-150-millimeter brushed titanium or polished steel band. Metro chats to scientist and co-founder Mario Ricciardi about the new fashion formula that is raising funds on Kickstarter.

In this age of data protection, isn't it bit risky walking around with your data on your wrist?
To be honest, the sequence that is generated by the lab analysis is taken at random from your sequence, so nobody knows your exact genetic code.

What if the swab is intercepted between sender and receiver?
The data engraved on the bracelet is not sensitive, so it's not a problem. And actually DNA is something that you can get from a glass at a bar.

Why would people want to wear their DNA over, say, their initials?
Unlike initials, this is truly unique. Nobody else will have the same genetic code as you. It's the ultimate form of customization out there. It makes for a very romantic engagement present, and we're looking at creating rings in addition to bracelets.

Talking point

Bieber a believer?

There's been an onslaught of reports of Justin Bieber and Selena Gomez engaging in wholesome activities around Los Angeles over the last few days, including acting "very touchy and affectionate toward each other" while attending a Bible study group one evening, according to E! Online. Then a Bieber pal went and posted an adorable photo of the pair napping on a sofa on the selfie-posting social network app Shots.

Lana Del Rey: The Guardian made me do it

To be fair, Lana Del Rey did title her debut "Born to Die." / ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Lana Del Rey doesn't seem too thrilled with the Guardian turning her "I wish I was dead already" quote into a story. The singer took to Twitter to complain in a series of tweets she later deleted. "I regret trusting the Guardian. I didn't want to do an interview but the journalist was persistent," she posted about her chat. She alleged that writer Tim Jonze (who she incorrectly cited as a different writer) was "masked as a fan but was hiding sinister ambitions and angles." She went onto write, "Maybe he's actually the boring one looking for something interesting to write about. His leading questions about death and persona were calculated."

Jonze responded by posting the audio of the interview. Though the lack of rapport between the two is uncomfortable to listen to, the writer did represent her words accurately. Del Rey's tweets are not complaints that her remarks were made up or taken out of context. "Instead she seems annoyed by the fact I wanted her to say interesting things and asked questions that caused her to do so," writes Jonze. "Well sorry, Lana, but that's just me doing my job."

Megan Fox tapering off acting gigs

Will we be seeing a lot less of Megan Fox soon?

Now that Megan Fox has a 2-year-old and a 4-month-old at home, she's souring on the whole show business thing. "It's so hard to be a working mom, especially when your heart is not in your work, when your heart is with your family," she tells Parents magazine, explaining that for now she's looking to work only as much as is necessary. "I have to make one movie a year, because I have to invest in their future," she says. "I'm looking for movies that will shoot in Los Angeles, for projects where I'm part of an ensemble so I can shoot in and out in 10 to 20 days."

We're fans of Fanning's frock

Elle Fanning took the term "dress accordingly" to a new level this weekend. Arriving in Tokyo, the 16-year-old actress wore a cute "Sleeping Beauty" dress to promote "Maleficent," where she plays — tada! — Sleeping Beauty! Angelina Jolie wore "Maleficent"-inspired stilettos from Christian Louboutin at the London premiere (see inset). We detect a trend!

The Barnes takes a fresh look at Cezanne's paintings

See more at www.metro.us

Museum. A new exhibit examines the famed still life artist's "mojo."

The paintings of Paul Cezanne have been looked at from virtually every imaginable angle since his death in 1906. So it's easy to understand Dr. Benedict Leca's trepidation at putting together yet another exhibition of the artist's work.

"Every time I sit down to write about Cezanne, I'm terrified," said Leca, director of curatorial affairs at the Art Gallery of Hamilton (Ontario) during a preview at The Barnes Foundation. "But I stare at the screen, and all of a sudden it's like a Ouija board. It happens every time. There's a reason why all of these artists in the 19th century zeroed in on Cezanne. He's got some kind of mojo that's very hard to explain."

"The World is an Apple," the new exhibit that opened at the Barnes yesterday, gathers 21 paintings to explore Cezanne's still lifes, which Leca called "the last frontier of Cezanne studies." The show is a perfect fit for the Barnes, which has 69 of Cezanne's paintings in its own permanent collection.

"We've always wanted the Roberts Gallery to provide opportunities for us to complement or illuminate the permanent collection," said Judith Dolkart, the Barnes' chief curator. "By focusing on a core artist in the collection, we're able to provide our visitors with a little more insight into his process and ambitions. And experientially, it's a little bit different. The gallery is full of stacked paintings, and I think this provides a different experience to focus on individual works very closely. I do hope that people will come away with a sense of Cezanne's process and understand him a little bit better."

Bringing still lifes to life

Visitors to the gallery are greeted with Cezanne's declaration that he wanted to "astonish Paris with an apple," and a stroll through the gallery exemplifies his success with a variety of fruit, pitchers and, later, a few human skulls.

"I think we have this idea that still lifes are static objects with a fixed meaning, deliberately arranged," Leca said. "Yet Cezanne activates these static objects and makes these incredible imaginative leaps — and he wants you to make those leaps, too."

Cezanne incorporated human skulls in some still lifes, like "Skull on a Drapery."

‘Extremely emotional’

"The Case Against 8" details the mission to knock down Proposition 8. / HBO

Interview. Makers of a Proposition 8 doc capture five years of “massive change.”

Documentary filmmakers Ryan White and Ben Cotner are finally seeing five years’ worth of work come to fruition with “The Case Against 8,” chronicling the legal challenge to California’s Proposition 8, which outlawed gay marriage in the state in 2008. The film premieres on HBO Monday June 23 at 9 p.m.

On keeping it together when chronicling such an emotional subject
Ryan White: It was an extremely emotional film to make. I had made two films before this and I’d worked on many other films before, but I don’t think we’d ever worked on something that we were so emotionally invested in — because the result of our film directly affected what our rights were. I would say it became increasingly emotional the more we went into it. By year five we were about to boil over, just blubbering messes.

On how quickly opinions on gay marriage have changed
RW: I think it was shocking. I wasn’t expecting that. Ben’s from Indiana and I’m from Georgia, so we’re not from parts of the country that are particularly LGBT-friendly. And we’re not from parts of the country that are on the road to marriage equality. When Prop 8 passed, I remember not being that surprised. Like, “Of course we don’t get that, because we never get that. That never happens, and our rights are always voted down.
Ben Cotner: It felt like there was this landslide of people coming out in favor of it leading up to the Supreme Court decision. We in our entire lives had never really had elected officials speaking out for our rights, and all of a sudden here in such a short window of time there was such a massive change. It was really surreal to see how quickly things were changing.

Keepin’ on

On the end of Prop 8 not being the end of the struggle
BC: We can’t take these rights for granted. I think that is even more important now because there’s this conversation that it’s inevitable. And remember, that’s how we felt in 2008 when Proposition 8 was being passed. We think about that a lot and how now, with everyone hoping and assuming that the Supreme Court will take this case and make a final decision in favor of same-sex marriage some day, I don’t think we can assume that that’s inevitable. And even if that does happen, there are so many other things that need to happen, whether it’s Employment Non-Discrimination Act or anti-violence acts here and abroad. There’s a lot of work still to do. I think we should all look back to that day in 2008 and remember not to be complacent.

When Lionel Richie comes to the phone, he doesn't use the one word that he practically holds a copyright to. Instead he greets this reporter by name as if we're old friends.

Hello! Do you consciously try to not say "hello" in conversation?
Sometimes I forget altogether. Like today, because I am doing interviews, I am conscious of it. But other times I will say, "Hello" and people will be like, "A-ha!"

Younger generations still listen to you, and you're always working with new artists. Plus you're touring with Cee Lo. How do you stay current?
I actually still love the bulls—. You have to know that you can't take it seriously, because it's not serious. When you find yourself saying, "Oh my God, this is garbage! What's this on the radio?" … If you find yourself saying that, it passed you by. … Every generation has to come up with some new shock value.

Speaking of which, your tour mate had a hit with probably the most profane swear.
Absolutely! … What is happening now with Instagram and everyone taking pictures and putting it out there, in the '70s we could lose a career for that. Now this is just everyday humdrum.

Describe a pic from the 1970s Instagram account of the Commodores …
It's 1974. We're in Amsterdam. I'm partying my brains out. … And you can fly home and go to the first pew in church and it's "Lionel Jr. is back from tour."

What's your reaction when people do things like that?
It's the best form of flattery. … Where did that picture show up? London, Amsterdam, Cairo, Libya. I have people calling me saying, "Lionel, I took a picture of this, and I am in Libya." … Everywhere in this planet that picture has stuck to something.

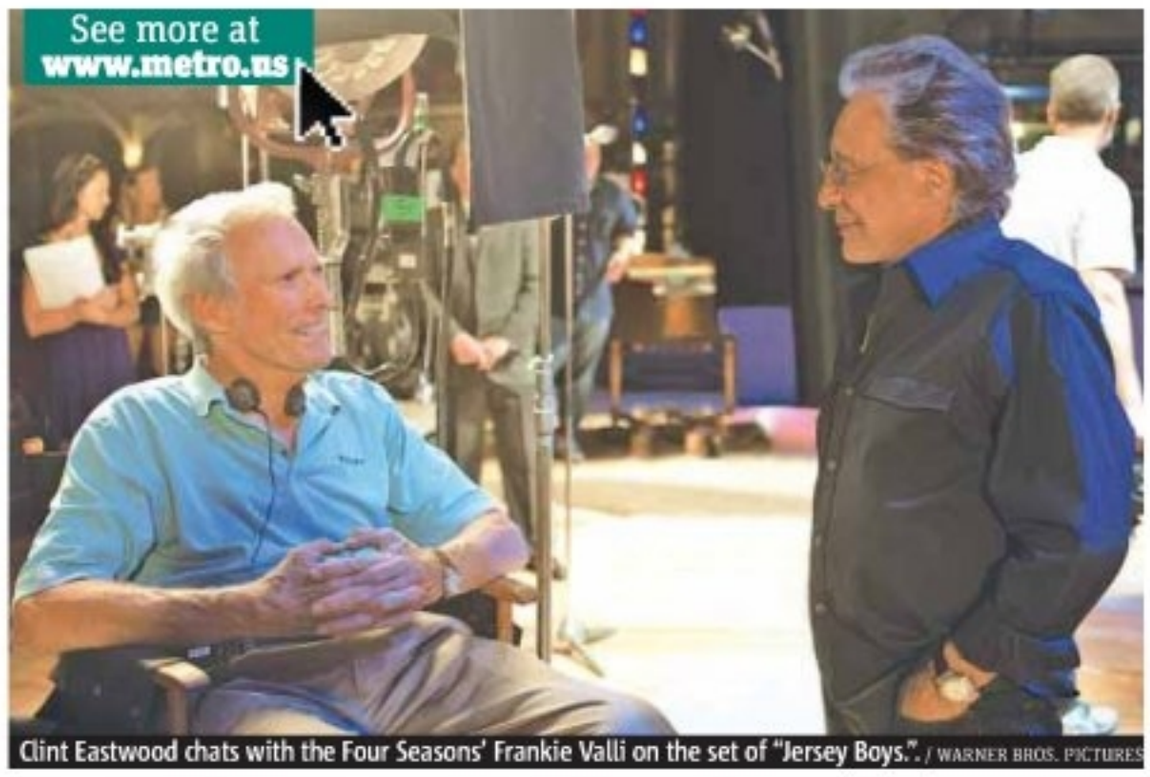
The man with a name

Interview. "Jersey Boys" director Clint Eastwood swears he enjoys the Four Seasons.



Clint Eastwood chats with the Four Seasons' Frankie Valli on the set of "Jersey Boys". / WARNER BROS. PICTURES

Perhaps you can't imagine Dirty Harry bobbing his head to "Walk Like a Man," one of many heavily harmonic and almost aggravatingly catchy songs by the Four Seasons. But Clint Eastwood claims he was always a fan.

"I did like the Four Seasons a lot. I thought their music was far superior," Eastwood remarks. "'Can't Take My Eyes Off You' is one of the classic songs of the era. It would have been a classic song in the '40s, '50s or '30s."

That still doesn't explain why Eastwood is directing a movie of "Jersey Boys," the gaudy (and expletive-filled) jukebox musical about the life of the '60s crooners, which has long dominated the country's stages. Indeed, his answer to what attracted him to the project is typical Clint, which is to say comically evasive: "It seemed like something to do."

Then again, he does point out that there's a section of his CV "Jersey Boys" belongs to.

"I've done movies on country music, jazz and pop music," Eastwood says. "I like music of all kinds. I love to do films about musicians, or in this case singers." The Four Seasons may not seem as bold as his sickly western crooner in "Honkytonk Man" or Charlie Parker in "Bird" — or even his horny DJ in "Play Misty for Me." But they prove to be nearly as self-destructive, with ties to the mob that don't get severed after a string of number one records.

Eastwood had never seen the musical before getting offered the job, and he immersed himself by seeing productions in New York City, San Francisco and Las Vegas. "I thought I could approach it from a more realistic angle," he says. "There's a lot of things you can do in a movie that you can't do onstage."

Eastwood doesn't take credit for what he calls his "Hitchcock moment" — the appearance of the director on-screen, or at least on a television tuned to "Rawhide," the Western program that first made him big in the late '50s and early '60s. "That was actually Rick's suggestion," referring to Rick Elice, who co-wrote the movie script with the show's book writer, Marshall Brickman.

After all, the Four Seasons and Eastwood rose to prominence around the same time. "I'd had my first break after doing years of bit parts and unappealing roles. And then I was working with various directors before getting to Sergio [Leone] and [Don] Siegel."

Casting

Get lucky

Vincent Piazza
GETTY IMAGES

Three of the band members were culled from the play, including John Lloyd Young, the longtime Frankie Valli. "If you have someone with 1200 performances under their belt — that's experience you can't buy," Eastwood says.

The only one who isn't a "Jersey Boys" alum is Vincent Piazza, as the roughest "season," Tommy DeVito. Eastwood admits he had never watched an episode of "Boardwalk Empire," on which Piazza plays Lucky Luciano. "We were worried about Vince, because he was starting from scratch. But he just fit in right away. I was just lucky," Eastwood recalls. "Casting a film is one of the most important things, next to writing. If you cast a film properly, everything kind of finds its place very easily. But if you don't, you're fighting an uphill battle."

In fact, he says a lot of his life is about chance: "I've always said I'd rather be lucky than good."

Box office. "Think Like a Man Too" narrowly defeats fellow sequel "22 Jump Street."

"Think Like A Man Too," a sequel to the 2012 comedy based on Steve Harvey's book "Act Like a Lady, Think Like a Man," collected $30 million in ticket sales to lead the weekend box office, outdistancing last weekend's top film, "22 Jump Street."

In a rare summer week with no big-budget movie openings, "22 Jump Street," starring Jonah Hill and Channing Tatum, took the No. 2 spot with $29 million at U.S. and Canadian theaters for the three days ending on Sunday.

The animated film "How to Train Your Dragon 2" was third with $25.3 million in its second week, according to box office tracking firm Rentrak.

Director Clint Eastwood's "Jersey Boys," the story of the musical group The Four Seasons, was fourth with $13.5 million, beating industry estimates of an $11 million opening.

"Think Like a Man Too," starring Kevin Hart and Michael Ealy, started strong with $1.8 million at Thursday night showings, tracking site Box Office Mojo said, despite mostly poor reviews. Only 15 of 67 reviewers gave it a thumbs up, according to Rotten Tomatoes, though 77 percent of moviegoers said they liked it.

The film had a modest budget of $24 million.

"Jersey Boys," which features a soundtrack of Four Seasons hits including "Walk Like a Man" and "Big Girls Don't Cry," received mixed reviews, with the site Metacritic giving it a 54 out of 100, based on reviews by 39 critics.

Rounding out the Top 5, "Maleficent," Walt Disney's take on the "Sleeping Beauty" fairy tale starring Angelina Jolie as the evil spell-casting fairy, pulled in $13 million. The film has totaled $186 million in domestic sales and $521 million worldwide, Disney said. REUTERS

As a psychotherapist who works with young adults, I often use metaphors from pop culture in my private practice. So when my 20-something client and professed "Harry Potter" devotee grew anxious about visiting her "Dementor" of a mother-in-law in Los Angeles, I naturally inquired, "What would Harry Potter do?"

"Well, of course, he would conjure his Patronus," she replied. A Patronus is a charm that wards off Dementors, specters that "drain peace, hope and happiness."

The only way to ward off a Dementor is with the Patronus charm, which requires "the concentration on a powerfully happy memory" — in other words, the power of positive thinking. Apparently, "Potter" creator J.K. Rowling was not only a genius of fantasy children's fiction, but also a sorcerer of pop psychology.

Rowling's therapeutic savvy further reveals itself in the spell to defend against Boggarts. A lesser menace in the wizarding world, these shape-shifting creatures assume the form of their observer's worst fear — but evaporate at the recitation of "Riddikulus!" which transforms the Boggart into something amusing instead.

The "Harry Potter" series has some devoted fans — and, suprisingly, good advice. / GETTY IMAGES

The Boggart in practice

By assuming the shape of our worst fears, Boggarts mirror our insecurities and unhealed emotional wounds.

An adolescent client of mine imagined a high school bully as a Boggart. The magic of pop culture references, which work particularly well with adolescent clients, is that they normalize the experience of being afraid yet offer playful responses.

Although therapists are often expected to be wizards of sorts — to read minds, wave our wands and invoke incantations that banish our clients' demons — Rowling reminds us that true magic lies within each of us when we focus on the positive and recognize the absurdity of our irrational fears.

The Patronus in practice

Sarah, my aforementioned client, was a writer whose self-revelatory blog posts addressed racism and religious hypocrisy. On a weekly basis, she received an esteem-boosting slew of emails from her growing fan base. Her confidence eroded, however, in the presence of her mother-in-law, who didn't share the same appreciation for Sarah's talents.

As her visit to California approached, we began to brainstorm how she might summon her own version of a Patronus to confront her personal Dementor.

Although Patronuses typically appear as shimmering animal silhouettes, Sarah took certain liberties with her talisman. She needed to anchor herself in something physically tangible.

After tossing around a few ideas, Sarah returned home and assembled a collage of photographs of loved ones, including her and her husband in their happiest times. Next, she cut out the grateful emails and wove them around the photographs, interlaced with powerful images and affirmations that she cut out from magazines.

Sarah was encouraged to meditate on her makeshift Patronus so that she could conjure it in her mind at will. Additionally, she brought her collage to Los Angeles and prominently displayed it in a separate apartment where she and her husband stayed during their visit with his parents.

Ultimately, the experiment was a success. Granted, it didn't work miracles in every encounter with her nemesis. But when dark thoughts began to creep into her consciousness after spending the day with her husband's family, Sarah studied her Patronus and felt better.

Fit to be fab

Maria Menounos. Losing weight wasn't just a personal struggle for the TV star.

Before her reality show on Oxygen, before competing on "Dancing with the Stars," before she was a red carpet reporter, Maria Menounos was in journalism school and facing the prospect of not achieving her dream.

The reason: At more than 40 pounds overweight, she was low on energy and often ill, which would hold her back in the fast-paced business of broadcast television.

Without trainers or nutritionists, Menounos spent a year developing the method that would become her new book, "The EveryGirl's Guide to Diet and Fitness," the "ultimate no-time, no-money, no-willpower guide." She tells us how wellbeing was key to her success.

Was there a moment when you decided to make a change?
My size 14 jeans grew skintight. I knew it was time to upgrade, yet again, to another size, and I didn't want to. With diabetes in my family, my fatigue and illnesses, I felt enough was enough.

What made you go your own route to wellness?
I feel like I tried every diet known to man — shake diets, coffee diets, grapefruit diets, you name it. I couldn't stay on any of them for more than a couple of days.

You started out with "no willpower"?

That came with progress and positive results. As soon as my pants fit loosely, I was ecstatic. A fire was lit and I was ready to step up my game.

How did you get started?
To properly motivate me, I tied my weight loss to a target date and event far into the future. There was a beauty pageant 11 months from the time I began.

How did you structure your diet?
Once I had my target date, I journaled my food for a week to see just how much and what I was eating. I was stunned to see the abundance and specifically the excess of bad carbs I was ingesting. Next, I simply cut a tiny amount from each meal; I didn't change what I was eating.

How would you describe your method?
It's a 50-year plan — a plan that helps to ensure you will not only be fit for the next 50-plus years, but mobile, strong and healthy, too. To achieve that, it's about striving to eat clean, unprocessed foods as much as possible and to remain active, urgent and mobile in your everyday activities.

Visit Metro.us to read four of Menounos' 11 simple rules.

For the EveryGirl

Why will your method work for other women?

I think most every girl out there wants to do and have it all, but struggles to find the time, money and willpower to succeed in doing so. One of those things is to be fit and healthy. I had no time, money or willpower back when I succeeded in losing the weight. The method in my book is tailored around those factors.

A graduates' guide to job hunting

Now that they have their degrees, it's time for new grads to put them to work. / PURESTOCK

From college to the real world.
Here's how to sell your undergrad experience to employers.

Now that graduation has come and gone, it's time for the Class of 2014 to jump-start the job search. It can be hard for new grads to figure out how best to sell themselves when their work experiences consist of part-time positions and internships.

Caroline Ghosn is here to help. As the founder and CEO of Levo, an organization that works to mentor young women as they enter the workforce, she often is asked by recent grads for tips and advice. Here's what she suggests.

Show your résumé over and over again

"The biggest mistake new grads make is that they don't get a second set of eyes to look at their résumé," says Ghosn. She suggests finding three or four trusted friends or colleagues to review your résumé and make suggestions. "That sounds like a lot," Ghosn admits, "but your résumé is only going to change for the better. You look at your résumé over and over, and you start to miss things. The third or fourth editor will really help you tighten it up."

Tell a story

Don't worry if you think your résumé is a little light on experience. "It's all about how to tell the story and making the story about your transferrable skills," says Ghosn. "You have to figure out how you can connect the dots. Let's say you were the social chair of a student organization or a fraternity or sorority. Your skills would be managing timelines, budgets and logistics."

And don't discount retail or food services positions. "I've never learned more about stakeholder management than when I was a waitress," Ghosn notes. "You learn how to approach people who want you to fix their problems immediately."

Be passionate

Don't worry if you appear a bit nervous at your first few interviews. "What interviewers are looking for is not someone that is stoic and cool as a cucumber," says Ghosn. "Interviewers are looking for passion, not perfection."

Don't be intimidated

"You have everything you need as a young grad to succeed. You are coming into this new world as a digital native and possess skills that other people are learning now," Ghosn says. "Focus on the things you have to offer."

LAKSHMI GANDHI

Style tip

An interview wardrobe must-have

Ghosn says every new grad should have a good blazer in the closet to complete an appropriate business look. "It makes a casual outfit instantly more professional," she says.

Learn the best ways to handle feedback at work with these tips. / DIGITAL VISION

No, really, 'Thanks for the feedback'

See more at www.metro.us

Office politics. A Harvard professor tells us how employees can process criticism constructively.

The annual performance review can be nerve-wracking for even the most confident of employees. And according to a new book by Harvard Law professors Douglas Stone and Sheila Heen, many managers say they hate giving feedback. So how can workplaces break this vicious cycle? Douglas Stone shares these suggestions.

Go into the meeting prepared

"Ask yourself: What's the worst that can happen?" says Stone. "We often have a tendency to exaggerate the extent of the feedback. Let's say I tell you, 'You are singing off-key.' In your head, you might be thinking, 'He's saying that I'm awful and that I might never get another job.' But all I'm really saying is that you are singing off-key."

Take the feedback in good faith

There are two reactions most people have to feedback. "No. 1 is that it is upsetting," he says. "No. 2 is that it is wrong. [So] the question is: Is it wrong or not?"

Ask for specifics

The term "feedback" is so broad that supervisors may not know where to start. "Instead, just ask for one thing. Say you are trying to get better in general, and ask if there is one thing that you should work on."

Know yourself

If you have a tendency to take feedback personally, it's important to take a step back, says Stone. "Ask yourself: Am I always going to feel that way?"

A tip for bosses

Say what you mean

Managers should try to be as clear as possible when giving feedback, says Stone. "Take an employee who is told something like, 'You have to be assertive,' or 'Take more initiative.' Those kinds of phrases don't have independent meaning." Instead, he suggests that managers give an example of what they'd like to see.

"Valuing your knowledge and opinions"

Type: Work from Home in the United States, Temporary, Part-time, Independent Contractor

Description:

As a US Social Media Internet Assessor your ultimate goal will be to contribute towards making internet search more exciting, relevant and interesting for all end users in the United States. You will play a part in improving the quality of one of the largest search engines in the world.

The internet has now become the powerhouse of all information, everything you need to find or explore can be found on the internet, yet how can we be sure this information is entirely up to date or relevant?

This is where you can contribute! We are looking for creative thinkers who enjoy browsing the internet and would like to express their opinion on the quality and content of what is currently out there on the web. You will be provided with guidelines and scoring criteria on how best to evaluate an internet search result.

We are currently seeking people who have a strong interest in Social Media, specifically those with an active Gmail and Google+ Account, and familiarity with other forms of social media and Google products.

You will have the flexibility and freedom to work from your own home, working your own hours, depending on availability of tasks (10-20 hours per week). Payment will be based on completion of the agreed upon tasks or engagements within the specified time period.

This is a freelance, independent contractor position.

Requirements:

- Fluency in written and verbal English
- Preferred level of education/certification - Bachelor's Degree (or equivalent)
- Regular user of Gmail, Google+ and other forms of social media including Twitter
- Familiarity with other Google products
- Access to and use of a broadband internet connection and associated computer and software to perform the work, all provided at your own expense
- From time to time, you may also be required to complete certain tasks using a Tablet (Android or iPad)
- Experience in use of web browsers to navigate and interact with a variety of content
- Access to and use of a Smartphone (Android version 4.1 or higher or an iPhone version 4S or higher) to complete tasks
- A Barcode Scanner application must be installed on your smartphone to complete certain tasks
- Time Management Skills
- A legal resident of the United States for the last 5 consecutive years.

Don't forget 'King and I'

RE: 'The book is now the musical is now the movie' (Metro, June 20-22) You forgot the grandaddy of this theme! "The King and I" was a book, then a movie (Rex Harrison and Irene Dunne), then a Broadway musical, a movie musical and a TV show — the last three starring Yul Brynner. Then it was a movie remake as a nonmusical with Jodie Foster and Chow Yun-fat. KATHY KOURIAN, VIA EMAIL

Fed is misnamed

RE: 'Not all banks are the same' (Metro, June 20-22) The Federal Reserve is NOT owned by the federal government. It is a private bank owned by shareholders, other regional banks, which are part of the Federal Reserve System. The United States borrows fiat currency from the Federal Reserve. If the government owned the Fed we would not have a national debt, we could print our own currency and not have to borrow Federal Reserve Notes. The Fed is a private corporation that controls the creation of currency and sets interest rates, not the government. In the end, it is not federal, has no reserves and is not a bank. Last kick of the night draws US-Portugal

World Cup. Team USA relinquishes a late lead and settles for draw against Portugal.

For a full television schedule, visit Metro.us/world-cup.

The Americans will need the third game of pool play after all.

Team USA earned a single point Sunday night in a 2-2 tie against Portugal in a highly anticipated Group G match.

But for elated Team USA fans all over the United States and the world, the draw is a stunning setback.

Portugal's Silvestre Varela netted the final shot of the night, coming over four minutes into stoppage time to shock the leading Americans and keep themselves alive to continue to vie for a berth.

The Yanks came back from a 1-0 halftime deficit to take a 2-1 lead and appeared to be headed for a sure clinch.

First, Jermaine Jones netted a brilliant scoring chance created after a missed shot to tie the match in the 65th minute.

Then, Clint Dempsey scored in the 81st minute, putting the United States just minutes away from clinching another three points.

The momentum created by the U.S. in their win over Ghana last week received a big hit early in Sunday's contest, when Portugal's Nani put his national team on top with a goal just five minutes into the match.

But Team USA was able to create their own momentum, thanks in part to five incredible saves from USA goalie Tim Howard.

A win against Germany at noon Thursday means they are in. But a draw or loss makes it much more complicated.

EVAN MACY

Two dramatic goals were not enough to earn the United States three points Sunday. / GETTY IMAGES

Still in the mix

The U.S. earned a draw against Portugal, making things a bit sticky looking toward the knockout round.

- If they beat Germany Thursday afternoon, they are assured of advancing with a total of seven points.
- If they draw against Germany, the U.S. will advance to the Round of 16 in the second spot.
- If they fall against Germany, they could only advance on goal differential against the Ghana or Portugal winner.

Belgium wins late, Algeria routs Koreans

Belgium locked up a spot in the knockout stage, but they certainly waited long enough to do it.

Divock Origi, a 19-year-old forward who came on in the 57th minute, netted the game-winner in the 88th minute to beat Russia, 1-0, in a battle of the two Group H favorites.

The goal was Origi's first in his international career. It was set up by a nice individual effort from Eden Hazard, who dribbled all the way to the goal line before Origi finished a centering pass.

Belgium leads Group H with six points after beating Algeria in their first game.

Algeria 4, South Korea 2

Algeria bounced back from that opening game loss to Belgium with an easy win over South Korea Sunday.

Algeria spread out the wealth with four different goal scorers in their first World Cup win since 1982.

Islam Slimani scored Algeria's first goal in the 26th minute, while Rafik Halliche scored just two minutes later to make it 2-0.

Abdelmoumene Djabou made it 3-0 in the 38th minute. South Korea scored in the 50th minute to make it 3-1, but they never got closer than two goals.

Anthony to opt out

In hardly surprising news, Yahoo! Sports reported Sunday that Carmelo Anthony will opt out of the final year of his contract with the Knicks and become an unrestricted free agent. The first day he could officially file papers was June 23. He may still return to New York, but Houston and Chicago are also contenders.

Phillies drop series finale in St. Louis

Early in Sunday afternoon's matinee against the Cardinals, the Phillies looked to be in the drivers seat with a three-run lead.

But Kyle Kendrick had a lackluster bottom of the fourth, relenting to give St. Louis four runs in a 5-3 loss.

Cody Asche smashed a bases-clearing double in the second inning to give Philadelphia a 3-0 lead.

But Kendrick surrendered four hits and a walk in the eventful frame to the Cards who salvaged a 2-2 series tie in the four-game set.

The Phillies drop to five games behind the Nationals in the race for the division. EVAN MACY

MLB. Phillies back home to face rivals after successful trip

By no means was it perfect, but with seven games against the Braves and Cardinals, the Phillies can return to Citizen's Bank Park with some momentum after a 5-2 road trip.

The Phils, who seek to continue to work their way into the race for the NL East have two of their most important series' of the season ahead as they host the Marlins for four games starting Monday before hosting Atlanta again for three.

Ryan Howard has turned, once again, into an RBI machine, ranking in the top 5 in the National League with 50.

And the bullpen has been fantastic all road trip long, with the two blemishes during the road trip going to Saturday's starter Cole Hamels (who pitched well enough to win) and Kyle Kendrick on Sunday, who relinquished a three-run lead.

The Phillies have been excellent on the road but have not proven they can turn Philadelphia into a home-field advantage.

The seven-game homestand gives the Phillies a chance to turn their fans and ballpark into an advantage, while perhaps picking up some ground on two of the three teams ahead of them in the standings. EVAN MACY

Hit king honors

The Phillies plan to honor Jimmy Rollins (perhaps while he is still a Phillie) prior to Monday's opener.

- A ceremony will begin at 6:50 p.m., and fans will receive a Rollins all-time hits leader print.
- Roberto Hernandez will start against Miami's Nathan Eovaldi.

Flyers schedule more balanced

NHL. The Flyers released their entire 2014-15 slate of games Sunday.

There are 82 games in an NHL season, so making a big deal of the Flyers' 2014-15 schedule — with more than three months till the first puck drops — is a bit premature.

But a first glance at their slate of games does hint that the Flyers, in the second season of realignment, could face a more manageable schedule than they had last season.

The Flyers open their 48th NHL season on Oct. 8 in Boston, with the home opener coming the next night against New Jersey.

The squad will play 30 games against division opponents, 24 against teams in the Atlantic, and a home-and-home against all the teams in the Western Conference.

The Flyers are back on the ice Oct. 8 against the Bruins. / GETTY IMAGES

The Flyers' schedule is more balanced with between 10 and 14 games each month. Their heaviest month of travel comes in December, when they will play 10 of 14 games on the road, and their busiest month at home comes in January when they play nine of 14 at the Wells Fargo Center.

Other highlights include a visit from the Stanley Cup Champion Kings on Oct. 28, and their annual Black Friday game on Nov. 28 against the Rangers at 1 p.m.

The Flyers will also have a holiday road trip — an eight-game trek split in two by Christmas — leading Philly from Toronto on Dec. 20 to Jan 3. in New Jersey.
